

Master of Arts in Education major in Social Studies Teaching
Academic Year 2018-2019
Reference CMO: CMO No. 53, s. 2007

Program Objectives

The Master of Arts in Education major in Social Studies Teaching (MAED- SST) aims to produce educators who: to develop competent and morally upright teachers and educational leaders who will inspire and contribute significantly in the national development. It further seeks to produce graduates who manifest the following:

1. deep understanding and critical thinking on the theoretical, social, political, and economic foundations of social studies teaching;
2. pedagogical skills and proficiency in social studies teaching;
3. quality and relevant research in the area of Social Studies Teaching; and
4. visionary educational leadership with strong character, integrity and responsive to the challenges of globalization.

Program Outcomes

Graduates of the (MAED-SST) program are expected to:

1. utilize higher order skills and various methods of research in the analysis, critical assessment, and application and communication of knowledge in the social sciences to everyday instruction and in the provision of meaningful learning experiences;
2. show advanced proficiency and dedication in the delivery of instruction, using a complex and coherent body of knowledge and skills in social science education;
3. demonstrate creativity and flexibility in applying knowledge and skills to new situations, and solve complex problems in the field through rigorous thinking and independent work;
4. apply existing knowledge and utilize proper contexts in addressing various issues that concern the teaching and learning of the social sciences;
5. manifest a comprehensive understanding of the methods of inquiry in their own research or advanced scholarship, and use these methods to create and interpret knowledge in the field; and
6. continue to advance knowledge and skills in the field using the established sources of advanced information.